

Public Health Fellow – Research and Project Management

The Prolepsis Institute, a Non-Profit Organization (NGO), specializing in public health with a strong national and international presence since 1990, is seeking for Public Health Fellows to join its dynamic and interdisciplinary team.

We are looking for a motivated and committed individual to support the design, implementation, and oversight of innovative research and applied programs in the fields of Health and Public Health, with a strong social impact focus.

Key Responsibilities

- Contribute to the design, management, and implementation of public health research and applied projects in Greece and internationally.
- Collaborate with and provide guidance to interdisciplinary project teams.
- Support or lead the development of partnerships with national and international organizations.
- Draft or contribute to scientific and technical reports, grant proposals, and peer-reviewed publications.
- Ensure the scientific rigor and quality of project deliverables.

Required Qualifications

- Medical degree or a PhD in a relevant field (e.g., Public Health, Epidemiology, Health Sciences).
- Passion for socially impactful and humanitarian programs aimed at reducing health inequalities.
- Fluency in Greek or English (native or near-native proficiency).

Desired Qualifications

- Documented research and/or teaching experience across more than one country or cultural setting
- Proven experience in health or public health sectors through clinical work, research, academic engagement, or project implementation.
- Knowledge of biostatistics and ability to analyze quantitative and/or qualitative data.
- Familiarity with digital tools and innovations, including AI technologies and data science tools relevant to public health research.

What We Offer

- Competitive compensation package based on qualifications and level of experience.
- Participation in high-impact projects with scientific and societal value.
- Professional development opportunities and international networking.
- A flexible and supportive work environment that fosters innovation and collaboration.
- Visa Sponsorship for foreign nationals.

Please send your CV and a letter of interest to: info@prolepsis.gr by indicating “Public Health Fellow” in the subject line.